The Smallpox Situation.

The smallpox among the Mexicans continues to spread, a new case having been found about three miles west of town yesterday. A detention camp has been made on the Montel farm and hereafter all cases will be concentrated there as soon as discovered and it is thought the spread can then be stopped. There was a report abroad yesterday that there were several cases in town but Dr. Smith had not been able to locate any up to the hour of going to press.

How to Detect the Alum Baking Powder

"Which are the alum baking powders; how can I avoid them unless they are named?" asks a housekeeper.

Here is one way: take the can of a lowpriced powder in your hand and read the ingredient clause upon the back label. The law requires that if the powder contains alum. that fact must be there stated. If you find one of the ingredients named alum, or sulphate of aluminum, you have found an alum. baking powder.

There is another and a better way. You don't have to know the names of the alum powders. Use Royal Baking Powder only; that assures you a cream of tartar powder, and the purest and most healthful baking powder beyond question.

CHAPTER III.

The Turn of the Page. John Valiant stirred and laughed, a little self-consciously, for there had been drops on his face. Presently he took a check-book from his pocket and began to figure on the stub, looking up with a wry smile. "To come down to brass tacks," he muttered, "when I've settled everything (thank heaven. I don't owe my tailor!) there will be a little matter of twentyeight hundred odd dollars, a passe motor and my clothes between me and the bread-line!'

Everything else he had disposed of -everything but the four-footed comrade there at his feet, "But I'd not sell you, old chap," he said, softly; "not a single lick of your friendly pink tongue; not for a beastly hundred thousand!"

He withdrew his caressing hand and looked again at the check-stub. Twenty-eight hundred! He laughed bleakly. Why, he had spent more than that a month ago on a ball at Sherry's! This morning he had been rich; tonight he was poor!

What could he do? He could not remember a time when he had not had all that he wanted. He had never borrowed from a friend or been dunned by an importunate tradesman. And he had never tried to earn a dollar in his life; as to current methods of making a living, he was as ignorant as a Pueblo Indian.

He rose grimly and dragged his chair facing the window. The night was balmy and he looked down across the darker sea of reefs, barred like a gigantic checker-board by the shining lines of streets, to where the flashing electric signs of the theater district laid their wide swath of colored radiance. The manifold calls of the street and the buzz of trolleys made a dull tonal background, subdued and

One was small, with the name of a legal firm in its corner. The other was largish, corpulent and heavy, of stout Manila paper, and bore, down one side, a gaudy procession of postage stamps proclaiming that it had been registered

"What's in that, I wonder?" he said to himself, and then, with a smile at the unmasculine speculation, opened the smaller envelope.

"Dear Sir," began the letter, in the most uncompromisingly conventional of typewriting: "Dear Sir:

"Enclosed please find, with titledeed, a memorandum opened in your name by the late John Valiant some years before his death. It was his desire that the services indicated in connection with this estate should continue till this date. We hand you herewith our check for $236.20 (two hundred and thirty-six dollars and twenty cents), the balance in your favor, for which please send receipt, "And oblige.

> "Yours very truly, "Emerson and Ball."

"(Enclosure)

He turned to the memorandum. It showed a sizable initial deposit against which was entered a series of annual tax payments with minor disbursements credited to "inspection and care." The tax receipts were pinned to the account.

The larger wrapper contained an unsealed envelope, across which was written in faded ink and in an unfamiliar dashing, slanting handwriting, his own name. The envelope contained a creased yellow parchment, from between whose folds there clumped and fluttered down upon the floor a long flattish object wrapped in a paper, a newspaper clipping and a letter.

Puzzled he unfolded the crackling thing in his hands. "Why," he said half aloud, "it's-it's a deed made over to me." He overran it swiftly. "Part of an old Colony grant * * * a plantation in Virginia, twelve hundred odd acres, given under the hand of a vice-regal governor in the sixteenth century. I had no idea titles in the United States went back so far as that!" His eye fled to the epd.

have wanted of an estate in Virginia? It must have come into his hands in the course of business."

He picked up the newspaper clipping. It was worn and broken in the folds as if it had been carried for menths in a pocketbook.

"It will interest readers of this section of Virginia (the paragraph began) to learn, from a recent transfer received for record at the County Cierk's office, that Damory Court has passed to Mr. John Valiant, minor-"

He turned the paper over and found

-John Valiant, minor, the son of the former owner.

"There are few indeed who do not recall the tragedy with which in the public mind the estate is connected. The fact, moreover, that this old homestead has been left in its present state (for, as is well known, the house has remained with all its contents and furnishings untouched) to rest during so long a term of years unoccupied, could not, of course, fail to be commented on, and this circumstance alone has perhaps tended to keep alive a melanenoly story which may well be for-

He read the elaborate, rather stilted phraseology in the twenty-year-old paper with a wondering interest. "An old house," he mused, "with a bad name. Probably he couldn't sell it, and maybe nobody would ever live in it. That would explain why it remained so long unoccupied-why there are no records of rentals. Probably the land was starved and run down.

"It's an off-set to the hail-bedroom idea, at any rate," he said to himself humorously. "It holds out an escape from the noble army of rent-payers. When my twenty-eight bundred is gone, I could live down there a landed proprietor, and by the same mark an honorary colonel, and raise the cab--while you stalk rabbits. How does that strike you?"

He laughed whimsically, He, John any one of a hundred brilliant glassand-silver-twinkling supper tables,, entombed on the wreck of a Virginia plantation, a would-be country gentle nothing a year!

He bethought himself of the fallen letter and possessed himself of it quickly. It lay with the superscription side down. On it was written, in

"John, you will not have forgotten that you are a Valiant. But you are also a Virginian. Will you have discovered this for yourself? Here is the deed to the land where I and my father, and his father, and many, many more Valiants before them were born. Sometime, perhaps, you will know why you are John Valiant of New York instead of John Valiant of Damory Court. CHAPTER IV.

A Valiant of Virginia. For a long time John Valiant sat motionless, the opened letter in his hand, staring at nothing. He had the awakened with a rude shock said wholly unfamiliar surroundings.

He was trying to remember to put two and two together. His father had been Southern-born; yes, he had known that. But he had known nothing whatever of his father's early days, or of his forebears; since he had been old enough to wonder about such things, he had had no one to ask questions of.

Phrases of the letter ran through his mind: "Sometime, perhaps, you will know why you are John Vallant of New York instead of John Vallant of Damory Court . . I cannot tell you myself." There was some tragedy, then, that had blighted the place, some "melancholy story," as the clipping put it.

He bent over the deed spread out upon the table, following with his finger the long line of transfers: "To John Valyante,," he muttered; "what odd spelling! 'Robert Valyant'-without the 'e.' Here, in 1730, the 'y' begins to be "i." There was something strenuous and appealing in the long line of dates. "Vallant. Always a Va-Hant. How they held on to it! There's never a break."

A curious pride, new-born and self. conscious, was dawning in him. He was descended from ancestors who had been no weaklings. A Valiant had settled on those acres under a royal governor, before the old frontier fighting was over and the Indians had sullenly retired to the westward. The sons of those who had braved sea and savages had bowed their strong bodies and their stronger hearts to raze the forests and turn the primeval jungles into golden planta-

There stole into his mood an eary suggestion of intention. Why should the date assigned for that deed's delivery have been the very day on which he had elected poverty? Here was a foreordination as pointed as the index-finger of a guide-post. "Every man carries his fate," he repeated, 'on a riband about his neck.' Chum, do you believe in fate?"

For answer the bulldog, cocking an alert eye on his master, discontinued his occupation-a conscientious if unsuccessful mastication of the flattish packet that had fallen from the folded deed-and with much solicitous tailwagging, brought the sodden thing in his mouth and put it into the outstretched hand

His master unrolled the pulpy wad and extricated the object it had enclosed-an old-fashioned from door-key.

After a time Valiant thrust the key into his pocket, and rising, went to a trunk that lay against the wall Searching in a portfolio, he took out a small old-fashioned photograph, much battered and solled. It had been cut from a larger group and the name of the photographer had been erased from the back. He set it upright on the desk, and bending forward, looked long at the face it disclosed. It was the only picture he had ever possessed

He turned and looked into the glass "When you read this, my son, you above the dresser. The features were

AGRICULTURAL LAND FOR SALE! Improved and Unimproved

In placing my holdings on the market, consisting of lands around Charlotte and Jourdanton, both improved and unimproved. I do so with the knowledge that these lands are most favorably situated and offer every convenience to those seeking homes. Within easy reach of every point are modern gins, well equipped schools, commodious churches, good roads lead everywhere, to nearby railroad stations and the best markets in Texas.

This property has not been offered earlier because these very necessary advantages were not to be had, but now they are a reality---nothing is left to speculation or future contingencies. Settlers now have all the advantages that can be found anywhere in a fully developed community without paying the prices that are asked in the older sections. You can have the benefit, for I am offering you the most desirable opportunity in Texas.

These lands are as good as can be had in South Texas; there are no better anywhere. Plenty of water can be obtained on any tract and shallow wells can be located at small cost furnishing an abundance of good water. The soil is fertile, there are no crop failures on these farms and no irrigation is necessary. No section of the state offers a more healthy or delightful climate, winter or summer.

The Henry Exall Farm Book.

During the last months of his life Colonel Henry Exall practically completed a text-book on up-to-date farming, intending it to be used to some extent in place of bulletins in the crop contests of the Texas Industria; Congress. It was written Respecially to meet farming conditions in Texas.

The work of the Congress, expressed in three words, has been to popularize scientific farming. Colonel Exall therefore laid hold of the wealth of useful information locked up in government balletins; infreports from the experiment stations of the States, and in the works of scientific agriculturists, and made out of it a plain, simple, easy digest in language that everybody can understand, and to this he added a number of conclusions and suggestions from his own study and experience. He knew that the farmers of Texas, as a class, are not college graduates, and that most of them are not high school graduates and that many of them Kare not even common school graduates. He therefore barred out all scientific jargon, and used the words he would have used in talking to his farmer friends

There are twenty eight chapters in the book, on such subjects as preparing the land, drainage, use of fertilizers, seed selection, live-stock, dairy farning, hog-raising, the silo, better corn, better cotton, farm book-keeping, landlord and tenant, and health- dissension. It is between these com-

FLAG OF TRUCE

City Prohibitionists Warned Against Strife.

Apricultural Legislation Demanded.

Fort Worth, Texas .- The following statement defining the position of the Farmers' Union on prohibition has been issued:

We recognize that the liquor question is a problem that is entitled to the consideration of the public, but we submit that the issue has but recently been passed upon by the voters of the state and that the past three or four sessions of the legislature have done little else than wrangle over the liquor question obstructing other important legislation for almost a quarter of a century.

Hurls Defy at Obstructionists. We are as much opposed to legislation favorable to the Antis as we are to legislation favorable to the Pros. The introduction of a liquor bill has invariably swept the calendar of all other measures, however meritorious, and has thrown the legislature into a seething mass of batants that the Farmers' Union, It with a membership of a quarter of who refuses to salute the flag and warns all obstructionists of whatever character to cease their activities until constructive legislation can be secured for the agricultural interests mount issue in this campaign.

Eliminate the Politician.

We recognize that the elimination of this question from the present campaign will paralyze the ambition of many party leaders, strike dumb some of our foremost political oraters and send many of our leading politicians to useful occupations for a livelihood, but the prosperity of all the farmers is more important than the preservation of a few contentious

It may be said that liquor legislation need not necessarily conflict with business legislation, but past experience completely blasts that hope. Then, too, it requires a different type of men to transact business from what it does to play politics. The next administrative and legislative branches of government should be a student body, addressing themselves exclusively to the solution of economic problems and they should not bed with troublesome ques-

Laws That Will Build Needed. The Farmers' Union, as an orcanization, will endorse no candidate for office, but its members wil in the main support candidates who are in accord with its principles of peace and harmony. Perhaps seventy-five per cent of our members voted for state-wide prohibition when the question was last submitted, but they cannot live on water alone; they must have bread. There are things the farmers of Texas want for themselves far more than things they want to keep others from having We need necessities for ourselves far more than to keep others from buying things that are unnecessary. We want the next legislature to develop the positive side of life, rather than the negative; we would like to hear the legislature say "thou shalt" to the strong and the capable as well as "thou shalt not" to the weak and vulgar. We want laws that build. as well as those that bind. We want strong men in the legislature who are able to deal with the tremendous forces of civilization rather than those who can gossip on the frailties of human nature.

The farmers of Texas will no longer be satisfied with platitudes or be further entertained with hortible stories of the wickedness of cities. Since the beginning of time, the cities have been seething in sin and they always will be. They have been blocking agricultural legislaion in Texas for the past quarter of e century, asking for laws that will wash them whiter than snow. Will they please open up the gangway and let the farmer in?

State-Wide Prosperity the Issue. We want to counsel the conservctive and warn the radical that the paramount issue in this campaign is tate-wide prosperity for the farmer and the more rapid development of he resources of Texas. We ask the farmers of Texas and the city business men to co-operate with the Union in its efforts to secure political beace and constructive legislation. W. D. LEWIS, President.

PETER RADFORD, Ex-President. Farmers' Educational and Co-Operative Union of Texas.
